INTRODUCTION.

French's (or Lacy's)acting edition of plays comprises two thousand four hundred and sixty plays, bound in one hundred and sixty-four volumes of fifteen plays each. There has never been made a complete index nor any satisfactory partial index to the series, and the material in it has been buried for all practical service. It has been the purpose of this thesis to discover what authors are represented in the collection and the nature of the plays included. This matter has been presented in the form of an author index.

In this author index, all the plays are grouped chronologically under their authors, the authors being arranged alphabetically. In each case, where possible, the authors have been indentified in the University Library catalogue or in the British Museum catalogue, and the form of name used which is accepted there. This explains references to other names, occasional differences in spelling from the manner of French's edition, and the addition of given names. In instances of collaboration the play in question is listed under each author with the names of the collaborators in parenthesis after the title. Anonymous plays are listed at the end of the index as such. In some instances of anonymous or pseudonymous plays, the authors have been identified through title page information, and in other cases through the Halkett and Laing or the Cushing encyclopedias of pseudonyms and anonyms. These authors are given in parenthesis under the titles of the plays, and, where authorship is certain, the play is listed under its author's name in the index, as well.

The dates listed are the dates of production given in the edition, which indicate that each play was played in the form here published at this date. They have no reference to time of composition, but usually indicate the time of first performance. The letters n.d. indicate that no date is given for the play as published by French.

The classification of the plays into tragedies, comedies, etc., is that of the producers, and in general that classification has been used, the term 1-act play being employed in cases where it applies when no classification is made on the bill of the play itself.

The number in the last column of the index indicates the volume in which each play is to be found. The pages of the volumes are not numbered consecutively, the plays being in themselves complete units, so that page references to the several volumes are impracticable.

The dramas included in this collection are particularly those produced during the nineteenth century, but there are those from the eighteenth and twentieth centuries as well. There are some adaptations and translations, but the majority were originally written for the English stage in their present form. The high percentage of farcical productions and burlesques is notable, and also the number of scenic and musical pieces: extravaganzas and operas.
